Rohit came into the rotation with a good base of medical knowledge and clinical skills, and he demonstrated good learning and improvement through the rotation. By the end of rotation he was functioning quite independently and effectively in the maternity clinic setting. He did have a few gaps in knowledge/clinical skills specifically related to intrapartum care- these were identified and he was continuing to work to close these gaps through the rotation. Rohit's clinical experience in the LDR/intrapartum setting was somewhat limited due to a shorter rotation (related to vacation and holiday time off) as well as unfortunately lower volume on his call shifts and several situations where patients declined having male learners involved in labour (which was not his fault at all!). I did mention to Rohit that if he felt it would be helpful to his learning through residency to have more time on OB call, I would be happy to facilitate a few more call shifts for him (during elective time etc). To be clear I do not think that this is necessary-- just an option that is open if he would like it. As is usual for our residents, if Rohit wanted to do intrapartum care as part of independent practice, we would recommend additional OB training during/after residency. Thanks for your contributions to the team, Rohit, and congrats on a successful rotation!

Rohit is a confident and engaging communicator who did well communicating with patients, staff and preceptors. He easily establishes great patient rapport and is able to quickly develop trust from patients which is a skill that will serve him well as a family doctor! There were a few instances where preceptors felt that his confidence in communication led them to make assumptions about his clinical knowledge/understanding that they shouldn't have. I've encouraged Rohit to be as open as he can about knowledge gaps and the things he doesn't feel comfortable with to enable him to optimize learning opportunities through residency. Overall however he has very strong communication skills.

Collaborated well with patients and all team members. Notably, he did an excellent job of collaborating with medical students, making a great effort to create a positive shared learning environment and to take all available opportunities to provide teaching to them.

Rohit did well managing his own learning needs/goals through the rotation. As above, I would encourage him to focus on the things he feels least comfortable with to optimize learning. He was doing a good job managing patients quite independently in maternity clinic and postpartum settings by the end of the rotation and continuing to work on developing competence in managing patients in labour.

Professional- on time, hard working, respectful. Demonstrated good professionalism skills in bringing up/addressing a difficult interaction with a preceptor. Was able to receive feedback in an appropriate and respectful way. No concerns!
